

I support low power FM stations. Where I live in Western Massachusetts, radio stations are being bought up at an alarming rate by large out-of-town corporations that don't necessarily have our communities best interest in mind. I see low power FM radio as a way to offer small communities a voice. Efforts like Valley Free Radio here are ways for communities to have their own voice. To me, that is more important than the ability of large radio conglomerates to have translator stations to rebroadcast signals to a wider area.
